Oregon online legal resources are not official.
The state's online administrative rules publications, statutes, session laws, and court opinions have disclaimers that clearly state that the resources are unofficial and identify the official print titles. Online resources are made available "as a public service" or are "provided for convenience of reference and enhanced access."

Oregon is not addressing the authentication of online legal resources.
Authentication methods involving technology are not being considered at this time. Disclaimers for some of the resources state that the online text has not been reviewed for accuracy or legal sufficiency. In the case of statutes, state law prescribes a certification procedure that has been applied to print versions only.

Has the state eliminated the print publication of any of these titles in favor of online only since the 2007 report? No.

Has the state enacted legislation guaranteeing the public's permanent access to state online government information since the 2007 report? Oregon Administrative Rule 543-070-0000(2)(e) establishes that "the State Library will retain all tangible materials permanently and will maintain a permanent, accessible archive for electronic publications."

Have courts in your state adopted a medium neutral citation system since the 2007 report? No.

Have there been any other significant changes to the 2007 state summary? No.
