

MichALL

SPRING MEETING

April 3, 2009

“Law School research curriculums do not keep up with modern practice.”

“Law Firms don’t want to train new lawyers.”

“Law students rely too much on technology for research.”

Please join us in Lansing for a day of lively discussion and new perspectives.

There has always been tension between the Academics who initiate the legal research teaching and the Practitioners who continue the education. As the methods and strategies of legal research (and law practice) change, how can Academics and Practitioners work together to ensure that law students are adequately prepared without breaking the budgets or sanity of all involved?

Our program proposes not to provide all the answers, but to open an interesting and timely dialog (which may someday lead to innovation) among local stakeholders.

Additionally, Cornell Winston, AALL Board Member and Law Librarian for the United States Attorneys Office in Los Angeles, will provide an update on what is happening at AALL.
