Law Libraries

NEWS

Vol. 22, No. 3 Spring 1996

Newsletter of the State, Court and County Section of the American Association of Law Libraries

From the Chair

This year's activities for our SIS will soon culminate at the annual meeting in Indianapolis in July. Our business meeting will be followed by an educational program developed by Frank Herch and co-sponsored by the Automation & Scientific SIS on automated access to legal information (see Page 11). In addition, our SIS is sponsoring two excellent programs for the annual meeting; one is on establishing the authenticity of electronic documents, including digital signatures, and the other is on the escalating cost of law books (see Page 11). Many thanks to Michele Finerty for her work as our Education Chair.

Thanks to Sue Roach and her nominating committee for an excellent slate of officers for the upcoming election for our Section (See Page 2 for candidate biographies). Be sure to cast your ballot. If you have people to recommend for future elections, either for the Section or for AALL, be sure to get in touch with the nominations committee. Believe me, they would appreciate hearing suggestions for possible candidates.

The proposed revised standards for appellate court and county law libraries were approved by the AALL Executive Board at their March 1996 meeting. We will now be investigating possible ways to publish and disseminate the adopted standards. The proposed standards were published in our newsletter last fall.

As my term as Chair winds down, many changes are in the offing. For instance, the pending sale of West Publishing Co. to Thomson portends more than just changing the imprint on the title page of books. Other noticeable changes include libraries, courts and public agencies adding home pages on the Internet and reaching out to their customers in new and various ways. While all this is formenting, I can't help but feel that the more things change the more they stay the same.

However we package it, information and access to it has been around for ages. We continue to package it in books as we have for centuries. But before we mass produced books, we packaged it in manuscripts, scrolls, paintings, and other visual means. Librarians have also been around for centuries, organizing the information and making it more accessible in whatever medium in which it was produced. As we move to new and as yet unimagined mediums, I don't see our role changing. For example, in the little over a month that my library has had a home page, we have been advising customers online about locations for legal information available on the

Publications

I have several publications and many speeches. Recently, I served as Local Arrangements Chair for the 1995 AALL Winter Institute and on the faculty of the 1996 AALL Winter Institute (for which my-friend Gail Warren served as co-coordinator).

Statement

Our membership serves a much larger portion of the legal community than our numbers represent within AALL. AALL has often failed to address pressing concerns that affect a large majority of Americans: access to legal materials for all, the cost of online services to the poor and middle class, the conflict between unauthorized practice of law and provision of adequate reference services for pro se patrons, and teaching new technologies to small firm practitioners receive too little attention. Managing a board of trustees, library insurance, lobbying at the local level, handling employee problems, and the other problems of running a free-standing library are left to small scale, expensive education programs, such as institutes. What shrift AALL has given has been due almost completely to members of our SIS.

With your help, I would (1) continue to foster such programs as last year's National Conference; (2) seek to open membership in AALL to all who have a stake in our libraries, such as trustees; (3) strive to get meaningful education programs to our many members who have restricted budgets; (4) seek ways that the SIS and AALL might aid public law libraries and bar libraries to recover the funding lost in recent years; (5) seek to have law librarians and bar associations bargain the limits of legal advice each can give, as real estate agents and accountants have done.

Since I became a county law librarian nine years ago, through the example of my colleagues, I have found a deeper sense of purpose for our work. We help achieve justice in these United States. I would be proud to take on this assignment.

Faculty, AALL 1991 Winter Institute, Law Libraries—Serving the Needs of a Varied Constituency

Statement

As we look to the future of our libraries, the information services we provide and the constituents we serve, one thing is certain. Change. SCCLL should strive to meet the challenges of change by confronting a variety of issues. Obviously, our SIS would be hard-pressed to deal with all the issues. Perhaps, then, in the coming year we should focus on three: identifying creative ways to continue to provide information services efficiently and economically despite ever-decreasing financial resources—are there alternatives we haven't explored? examining the ethical considerations connected to the provision of reference services—while Charlie and I differ on perspective, we agree the issue is very important; and, finally, continuing to nurture and strengthen new alliances with our colleagues in the legal community.

I would like to see our SIS continue to seek input and insight from members of the judiciary, the bar and the public in the annual program planning process, not only reaching out to these individuals as speakers, but inviting them to attend our programs as a participant. Annually, we meet in different regions of the country—following Carol Billings' National Conference initiative, why not invite our constituents from that venue? On a daily basis, each of us confronts the unbalanced equation of more responsibilities and fewer resources—are we sharing our solutions? Our constituents are changing; their expectations of what we can and should provide are changing. Hailing from the state infamous for its UPL opinions, I also would like to see programming or sponsorship of AALL programs that speak to the ethical issues facing all law librarians and present a variety of perspectives.
