

Cite Soup

by Janet Oberla

For National Library Week, I had done word search puzzles in previous years and one librarian who shall remain nameless (you know who you are!) told me they were too easy. So, OK, smart guys - figure out the correct citation form for the items given and then find the corresponding abbreviation in the puzzle. That should slow you down. Even though the answers are short, they are not recognizable words, so it can take a bit of time to solve. This puzzle teaches people the wonders of deciphering citations. We love Bieber's, but knowing many of them from memory saves a lot of time.
