Services

UNC-CH LAW STUDENTS

The Law Library offers circulation services as well as book and article delivery services to students. In addition to providing general reference and research help, the librarians with law degrees teach skill-based courses including advanced legal research and advanced legal writing. Librarians also visit classes to discuss researching specific legal topics.

UNC-CH LAW SCHOOL FACULTY & STAFF

The Law Library provides general reference and research help, circulation services, expedited book and article delivery services, course reserves, routing of library materials, current awareness services, training for research assistants, and tailored classroom research instruction sessions. The library also has several specialized programs to assist law faculty, including assistance with short research projects and empirical research support. Each law faculty member is assigned a liaison reference librarian as a contact for personalized assistance.

UNC-CH NON-LAW FACULTY

The library provides tailored legal research instruction for undergraduate and graduate courses upon request.

NORTH CAROLINA LAW PROFESSIONALS

Law professionals can purchase specialized borrower cards and use interlibrary loan services for attorneys.

NORTH CAROLINA RESIDENTS

Residents are welcome to use the collection and many databases in the library. Borrower cards can be purchased for circulating materials.

Did you know?

The UNC library system provides access to more than 3 million law-related electronic resources including 3 million e-books and thousands of databases.

Faculty and students can get any available book delivered to the Law Library from any library on campus and from Duke, N.C. Central and N.C. State libraries within two to three days.
